

MAGON Debuts With The Fórsa Titanium Chronograph

The first creation from Magon Watches is the Fórsa Titanium Chronograph. A Swiss made mechanical, column-wheel chronograph, housed in a grade 5 titanium tonneau case.

There are two versions available. One in polished titanium and one in matt black, which is sandblasted DLC (Diamond Like Coating).

There's a very good reason there aren't many tonneau-shaped watches on the market and even less tonneau chronographs and we knew the case was always going to be more difficult (than a conventional case) to produce and indeed we met with many technical hurdles. Compromises were never made and while this meant longer development times and more expense, the efforts paid dividends.

Developed over 3 years and using over 25 years experience at the highest level of the Swiss watch industry, Stephen McGonigle, of McGonigle Watches brings an exceptional timepiece to the market.

“The best timepieces are inspired but they shouldn't necessarily be defined by their inspiration”

The first creation, was inspired by a lifelong passion for the sport of rugby. The design touches throughout the timepiece are very subtle, making this a very special piece, not just for sports fans but for anyone interested in unique design and quality Swiss engineered timepieces.

That said, the debut creation from MAGON truly is the first timepiece 'inspired' by rugby and while there are many pretenders to the throne, the Fórsa is an original in every respect.

Loads of information on the development and lots of high resolution images to be found on the website.
